PChat IRC Crack+

PChat IRC is an open-source IRC client developed to help you chat with your friends and transfer files. It is based entirely on X-Chat so users accustomed to working with this particular IRC app should find PChat IRC's layout and configuration settings very familiar. User interface When you run the tool for the first time, a configuration panel pops out letting you provide details about the user (nickname and username) and check out the list with networks. You may add, remove or edit the networks, select the favored ones, as well as skip network list on startup and show only the favorite items. The main window looks clean and simple. You are given the freedom to hide or reveal several features from the view mode, namely menu and topic bars, user list, user list buttons, and mode buttons. You can choose between a multi-tabbed layout and tree display. What's more, you can easily open a new server tab, channel tab, server window and channel window. You may enhance the utility's functionality with the aid of plugins and scripts. Servers and list of channels PChat IRC lets you easily connect or disconnect to/from the server and join several channels. The tool reveals a list with the available channels, provides info about them (channel, users and topic), and lets you perform search operations by channel name or topic and save the list to a file. Ban list, character chart, direct chat and file transfer The application comes with a rich pack of features for helping you manage a list with banned users, work with a character chart so you can easily insert various symbols while chatting with your friends, and enable a direct chat. When it comes to file transfers, you can upload or download items, resume the active process, open the folder where the items are saved directly from the dedicated window, as well as accept incoming file transfers. Ignore list, friends and general configuration settings PChat IRC allows you to keep a list with ignored users, check out a log with details about the entire process, as well as view a list with grabbed URLs.
