“I was in the Middle East on holiday recently when I received a serious phone call from Peter Knobel, my boss in Strategic Games, asking to meet me in London. “When I arrived, I found the company’s offices to be a hive of activity. On my desk lay an array of diehard Dungeons and Dragons game books, miniature figures and boxes of rulebooks. “I remember being taken aback by the look in my boss’s eyes. He was thrilled by what he saw. “I’ve been expanding the franchise and I’m just over the moon to be able to introduce the brand to you,’ he said. “I think you’ll really like it’, he added.” The magazine went on to explain that Wizards of the Coast “came to a deal with an investment group [which included BBC’s Bigger, Better, Stronger] that has preserved the company as a separate entity, and will allow them to flourish.” A connection was made between Peter Knobel’s boss and “a management consultancy” who “specialise in the roll-up of successful, high-growth, successful family companies.” The connection resulted in Strategic Games “regain[ing] control over the intellectual property, including Dungeons and Dragons (D&D),” then “funneling that asset into a thriving new enterprise.”Q: What’s the difference between this and this.addReservedProperty in JavaScript? var foo = {}; foo.addReservedProperty = function () { }; As well as var foo = {}; foo.addReservedProperty = function () { }; foo.addReservedProperty(); What’s the difference? A: The first is function binding. The second is function invocation. In both cases, these are equivalent: var x = function() { }; var x = function() { }; x(); But this will not (can’t) evaluate to the same thing: var x = function() { }; x(); var x = function() { }; x(); Because function calls are actual objects that are executed in a special way, and function expressions are merely regular objects that

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a semiconductor device and a manufacturing method thereof. 2. Background Art FIG. 6 is a cross-sectional view of a conventional semiconductor device. In this semiconductor device, an insulation film 104 is formed on a semiconductor substrate 101, and a plurality of gate electrodes 103 are formed on the insulation film 104. A p-type diffusion layer 102 is formed on the semiconductor substrate 101 in each of the gate electrodes 103. When a source/drain region 105 is formed by ion implantation, a remaining portion of the insulation film 104 is also ion implanted. As one example of the gate electrode 103 formed with an embedded structure, a structure shown in FIG. 7 is known, in which one contact 105a of the source/drain regions 105 is electrically connected to the gate electrode 103 by forming a metal plug 106 embedded in the insulation film 104, and the source/drain regions 105 are connected to each other by the metal plug 106 and the gate electrode 103 (e.g., see Jpn. Pat. Appln. KOKAI Publication No. 5-125319). In addition, as another example of the gate electrode 103 formed with an embedded structure, a structure shown in FIG. 8 is known, in which a gate electrode 103 is formed by a polysilicon layer 107 with a thickness of 2,000 to 3,000 Å and a tungsten silicide layer 108 is formed on the polysilicon layer 107 (e.g., see Jpn. Pat. Appln. KOKAI Publication No. 6-68998). However, the method described in FIG. 6 requires ion implantation, and there is a possibility that the insulation film is damaged or ruptured. In addition, when a wiring layer is formed on a thin gate insulation film, a short circuit or a leak current tends to be caused. Furthermore, when the buried type contact is employed in order to reduce the size of the device, a configuration for realizing high-speed operation or low power consumption is not taken into account. Moreover, a gate electrode formed of a single-layer polysilicon in a small-sized device has a resistivity higher than that of the polysilicon.
