So I'm trying to send the search string to my web server using postMessage. This is a simplified version of my code: Search // For simplicity, this function is in a separate file: function postMessage(msg) { var form = document.querySelector('form#search'); var el = document.querySelector('#searchText'); form.addEventListener('submit', function() { // The form is submitting. // Send the data as a postMessage to window.postMessage(el.value, ''); }); } The problem I'm having is the browser is submitting the form with a search string of "". I don't understand why, or how to resolve this. I'd prefer to not have to use a submit button. A: You might want to try to append the data to the data property of the window object, also set the window.location to send the message to the same page
